The Forestry Programme of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) addresses one of the most important, complex and controversial issues of modern times - how to use trees, forests and related resources to improve people's economic, environmental, social and cultural conditions while ensuring that the resource is conserved to meet the needs of future generations. The specific goals of FAO with respect to forestry include: the contribution of trees and forests to sustainable land use, food security, economic and social development and cultural values at national, regional and global levels; the conservation, sustainable management and improved utilization of trees and forest systems and their genetic resources; and increased worldwide access to reliable and timely forestry information.

Unasyuva is FAO's quarterly international journal of forestry and forest industries produced in separate English, French and Spanish editions. The journal provides informative, unbiased analysis on all aspects of forestry including policy and planning, conservation and management of forest-based plants and animals, rural socio-economic development, species improvement, industrial development and international trade. It also considers environmental issues, including the role of forests and trees in maintaining a sustainable base for agricultural production at the micro and macro levels as well as the effects of environmental change on forestry.

This compact disc presents the complete collection of Unasyuva, in full text and with all accompanying images, from 1947-2000. The collection may be accessed in two ways, by simply browsing through any of the 203 available issues or by using the search engine to identify specific articles by author, title, volume and issue number, publication date and language.

The Unasyuva collection is an invaluable, comprehensive resource bringing together 54 years of research, knowledge and analysis into an easily navigable product. As a whole, it presents not only the evolution of FAO's Forestry Programme but also the evolution of international forestry practices, principles and issues.
